In music, gesture is any movement, either physical or mental. As such "gesture" includes both categories of movements required to produce sound and categories of perceptual moves associated with those gestures. The concept of musical gestures has received much attention in various musicological disciplines in recent years. For example, the "musical" movement from a close-position tonic C major chord to a close-position dominant G major chord requires on the piano the physical ...

Gesture. A gesture is a movement that has a certain character and meaning. This meaning can be more or less culturally coded. The gesture as musical expression is the way the music "behaves" or moves, and is connected with the body perceiving it. The perceiving body does not have to move or act in order to sense the gestural character of the music.
